Intellectual Property A tool for economic growth in the third Millennium

Innovation is a key driver for present-day and future economic growth, and IP Rights are the tools that make such growth tangible.

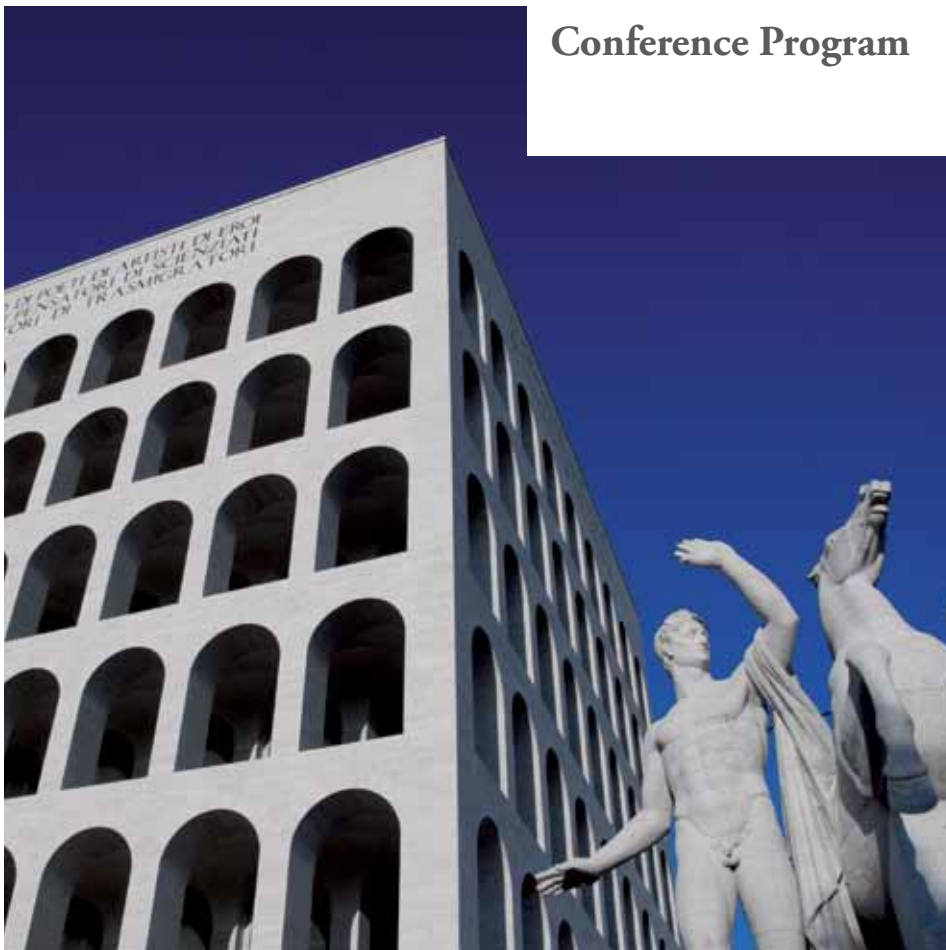

The LES Pan European Conference 2012 has been designed specifically to explore the role of IP as an essential asset for businesses in the 21st Century.

Over the past 40 years, Intangible Assets and Intellectual Property have become increasingly important, both economically and strategically. If in the 1970s they accounted for about 20% of a company's worth, today this ratio is reversed. According to recent estimates, in developed countries Intangible Assets - such as trademarks, patents, copyrights, but also management reputation, employee know-how, and client and supplier portfolios - account for 80% of the market value of a company. Warehouses and industrial assets only for the remaining 20%.

Intangible Assets and Intellectual Property have therefore become the real engine of the modern economy, especially in the industrialized world. They should consequently be protected and their value maximized since they constitute a key factor in a company's financial and economic success. Not only are they a competitive advantage, but Intangible Assets can also be a source of funding for companies. The revenue derived from royalties for the use of a particular brand or patent may in fact be reinvested in a company, creating the so-called "inventive loop."

About Rome

Founded by the Romans in approximately 750 BC, Rome is considered one of the most historically, educationally, and culturally interesting and beautiful cities in the world.

Due to its invaluable archaeological and artistic treasures, Rome is an important tourist destination. The Colosseum, Rome's most iconic archaeological site, is one of the New Seven Wonders of the World.

Among the most significant resources of this amazing city are its many museums (Musei Capitolini, the Vatican Museums, Galleria Borghese, numerous museums dedicated to modern and contemporary art and many others) aqueducts, fountains, churches, palaces, historical buildings, monuments and ruins of the Roman Empire, and the Catacombs.

In Rome you find the ancient world integrated with the modern: the Pantheon and the Roman Forum rub shoulders with Baroque palazzos; Renaissance villas sit alongside the modernism of Eur.

But Rome also boasts a terrific social life. So after you have been seduced by art and architecture of the ages, and maybe gone shopping for the latest fashions in via Condotti, you can just relax and sit at a sidewalk café or have a wonderful dinner in one of the many restaurants, trattorias, or osterias; just as modern Romans do. Caput Mundi during the Roman Empire and Capital of Italy since 1870, Rome is really the “eternal city” that you absolutely must enjoy once in your life.
